OUR VALUES

Healthy Diet

Awareness

We prioritise awareness about what and why we eat. Our members tended to snack mindlessly while studying or scrolling. By focusing on hunger cues and food nutrition labels, we became more aware of our habits.

Discipline

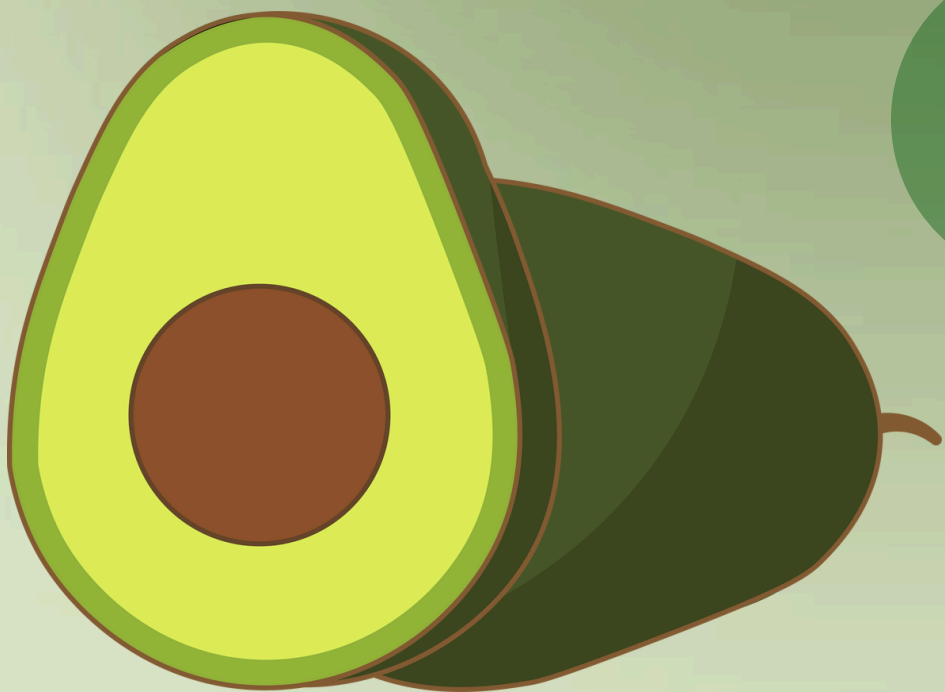

Our team believes that self-discipline is about choosing simple actions even when we are not motivated. For example, some of us struggle with nighttime snacking during exam periods. Instead of aiming for perfect diet, we build discipline through planning small snacks (yogurt, fruits, nuts) and sticking to regular meal times.

Healthy choices should be easy to apply. Some students can't afford expensive 'Healthy food' or don't have enough time to cook complex meals.

We choose accessible and easy to apply habits like drinking water in the morning and adding one fruit or vegetable into our routine.

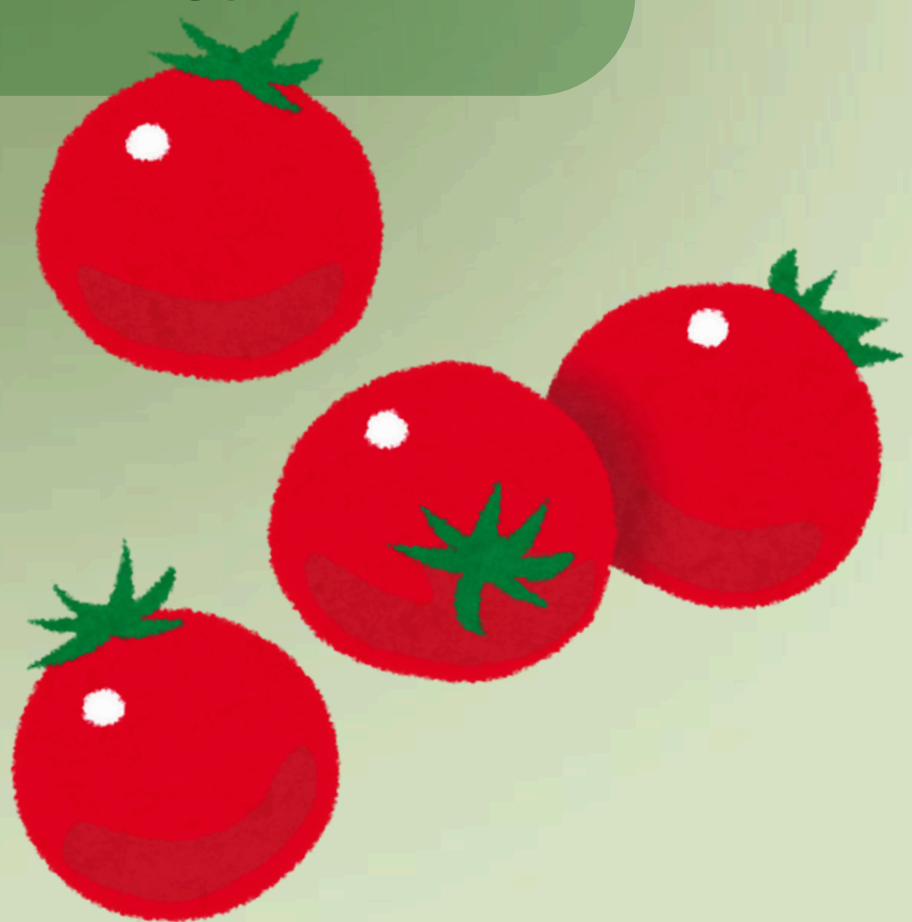

Accessibility

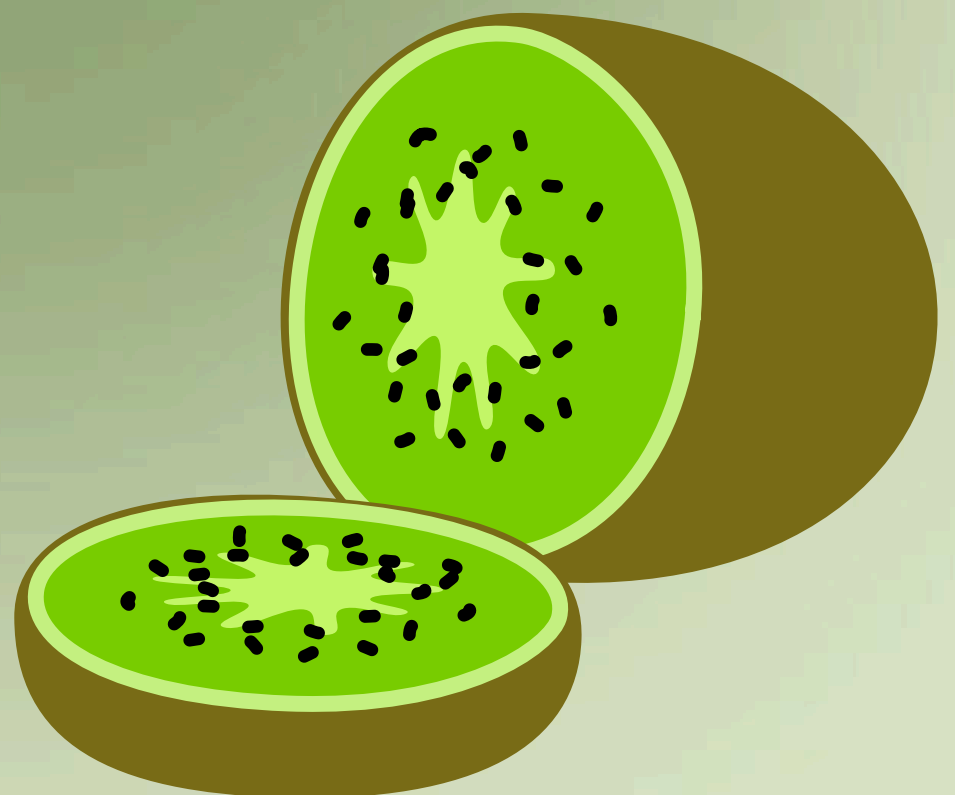

Balance

Balance means enjoying food and life without extreme actions and guilt. Some of us tried strict diets in the past and quickly gave up. Now, we practice balance by allowing occasional treats while sticking to everyday healthy habits.

Our team takes responsibility for our personal habits and for the impact we have on other people. We don't just tell people what to do – we present ourselves as role models by tracking our habits and sharing both successes and failures.

Responsibility

Health

For us, true health means feeling better both in body and mind, not just changing how we look or seeking quick weight loss. When our member replaced their habit of skipping breakfast and drinking coffee with a simple morning meal, their energy and focus improved. This is exactly why our project is committed to sustainable well-being over short-term results.
